Across the vastness of space, evil flourishes in the darkness between stars. With territories spread far and wide across the Galactic Federation, pirates and hijackers have ransacked these distant colonies with cruel disregard for the innocent scientists living within them.

Yet there is a cosmic vigilante who metes out justice across the spaceways, bringing vengeance to those who prey upon the defenseless.

They call him the...

THUNDERCATS: LOST EXPANDS THE SMASH-HIT FRANCHISE WITH ALL-NEW CHARACTERS AND STORIES! AUTHOR ED BRISSON BREAKS IT DOWN

Ed, when you were working on the Apex special for our ThunderCats line, we aready grilled you a bit about your history and attachment to the franchise overall. But for those checking out this new series, can you speak a bit about your love for this world and characters?

ThunderCats was part of that power hour of incredible back-to-back cartoons with SilverHawks that came on at four o'clock. I was a latchkey kid who'd come home directly from school and mainline TV until my mom would come home and peel me away. We only had a few of the toys, but I followed along with the comic series that Marvel was putting out at the time and always caught the animated series during reruns.

On that note, you're reuniting for an extended stretch with artist Rapha Lobosco, who drew Apex. What's it like working with him again and carrying forward the momentum you built together in the ThunderCats world?

It's been great! I love working with Rapha. Behind the scenes, we pretty much rolled right from Apex into ThunderCats: Lost as these were projects that were offered to us at the same time. We didn't want to lose the momentum we had going from Apex.

Rapha is the type of artist that I love working with. He's incredibly collaborative and we're in near constant contact to discuss story and characters, shooting ideas back and forth. The thing I love most about writing comics is collaborating with artists, and when you're teamed with an artist who is as excited about the project as you are and wants to ensure that you both pour yourselves into it, it's a special sort of magic.

The initial ThunderCats series from Declan Shalvey and Drew Moss is still marching along, so we must ask, how do you kind of see the differentiation between it and your own Lost? We're told that this title will feature a wholly separate core cast as well as characters that haven't previously been in the spotlight much, and that in a way it's a bit like a "Suicide Squad" of the ThunderCats world, whereas the main series would be closer to their "Justice League."

The Suicide Squad vs. Justice League comparison is a good one, I think. The two teams have two very different approaches to their missions — even if both have the same goal of trying to ensure the survival of Thunderians.

There are parts that are tough to talk about without wading into spoiler territory, so I'm erring on the side of caution here. What I can say is that the ThunderCats: Lost team has set out with the intention of founding a new home for the Thunderians, but there are some very key differences in their mission that even the ThunderCats: Lost team is not aware of. They carry a pretty large burden in the form of secret cargo that would ensure the survival of their kind — but that cargo has slipped through their fingers.

The world that the ThunderCats: Lost team have ventured into is, in a lot of ways, very different from where our mainline ThunderCats are, and the trials and tribulations that they face as a result are very different —though just as deadly. The lifestyle, technology, and culture of the world they've touched down on is more tech and less magic based, and is heavily militarized. They do not like cats, and are hellbent on ridding the planet of these new interlopers. The villains they face will be familiar to ThunderCats fans, but, again, you'll have to read to find out just who!

Eagle-eyed returning fans of ThunderCats will recognize some of the characters in Lost, such as Bengali, Pumyra, and Lynx-O. But there are also going to be some new characters in the series, including Neko and Ligon. Can you talk a bit more about the cast and bringing your own additions to the franchise?

Bengali, Pumyra, and Lynx-O were all second-season additions on the original animated series. Their origin in our series will vary from their origin in the cartoon, while still maintaining some similarity. Who they are hasn't changed, but the thrust of their mission has. In the original series, they were Thunderans who were prevented from leaving on the same ship as the ThunderCats and seemingly doomed before being rescued by Berbils. In ThunderCats: Lost they have a larger, more important role that's directly tied to the survival of all Thunderans — a role that connects both the Apex one-shot and the ongoing ThunderCats book, but with a bit of a twist.

Joining them on this mission are two new characters: Neko and Ligon. Rapha and I spent quite a bit of time developing these two characters, and I've fallen in love with both of them. Neko is a snow leopard who may be smaller than the rest of the crew but is probably the fiercest ThunderCat to date. She's a skilled warrior and killing machine who tries to solve every problem with violence. Ligon, on the other hand, is a Liger (half lion, half tiger). Ligers are the offspring of a male lion and a female tiger, and since growth inhibitors are passed on by lion mothers and tiger fathers, Ligers don't have them. As a result, they're prone to gigantism. Ligon is no exception. He's the giant of the team. A brutal menace on the battlefield who has no need for weapons beyond his fists. When not in battle, he's kind and caring. He's the heart of the team, always compassionate (sometimes to a fault), whereas Neko tends to be more impulsive and reckless.

Not too long ago, you were popping in as a guest creator for the franchise with Apex. Now, just a few short months later, you're going to be juggling two ongoing titles with ThunderCats: Lost and the sister series SilverHawks. Can you talk about the overall passion you have for these books, the collaboration with folks like Declan and editor Nate Cosby, and bringing all these fun stories to the fans?

As I mentioned above, these series were part of my childhood. I loved the whole Rankin-Bass oeuvre, and being able to contribute to the lore on just one book is incredibly exciting — being on two feels like I won the Lotto. It's a real honor to be playing such a big role in the expansion of this world, and it's something I've been taking very seriously.

Nate, Declan, and I have an ongoing chat where we've been hashing out plans for the books going forward. There's a lot of care and effort going into ensuring that these books all feel both unique and as though they're part of the same larger universe. It's a tough balance to achieve, but it has been a deeply rewarding experience. Nate and Declan were the ones who came up with an idea to expand the ThunderCats universe with this new book, and they came to me with some ideas already in place but were open to what I wanted to bring to the table to help make it its own thing. I know I said it once already, but the thing I love most about making comics is the collaboration with other creators, and with this expanded universe, between Rapha, George (on SilverHawks), Nate, and Declan, I'm being spoiled with it.
